Prologue Alexandra Mountbatten had common sense. That's what her friends believed. The truth was, Alex had no sense at all—at least, not when it came to charming gentlemen with roguish green eyes. If she possessed any wisp of rationality, she wouldn't have made such a fool of herself with the Bookshop Rake. Even now, more than half a year later, she could revisit the embarrassing scene and watch it unfolding, as though she were attending a play. The setting: Hatchard's bookshop. The date: a Wednesday afternoon in November. The personages: Alexandra, of course. Her three closest friends: Nicola Teague, Lady Penelope Campion, and Emma Pembroke, the Duchess of Ashbury. And, making his first appearance in a starring role (trumpet fanfare, please)—the Bookshop Rake. The scene proceeded thusly: Alexandra had been juggling a tower of Nicola's books in one arm and reading her own book with her free hand. A copy of Messier's Catalogue of Star Clusters and Nebulae, which she'd plucked like a pearl from the used-book section. She'd been searching for a secondhand copy for ages. She couldn't afford to buy it new. One moment, she'd been blissfully paging through descriptions of astronomical nebulae, and the next . . . Bang. A collision of cosmic proportions. The cause remained unclear. Perhaps she'd taken a step in reverse, or maybe he'd turned without looking. It didn't matter. Whosoever's elbow jostled the other's arm, the laws of physics demanded an equal and opposite reaction. From there, the rest was gravity. All her books fell to the floor, and when she looked up from the heap—there he was. Ruffled brown hair, fashionable attire, cologne that smelled like bottled sin—and a smile no doubt honed from boyhood as a means to make women forgive him anything. With affable charm, he'd gathered up the books. She'd been no help at all. He'd inquired after her name; she'd stammered. He'd asked her to recommend a book—a gift, he said, for two young girls. In response, she'd stammered yet more. He'd drawn close enough for her to breathe in his woody, earthy, oh-so-manly cologne. She'd nearly fainted into the antiquities section. But then he'd looked at her with warm green eyes—truly looked at her—the way people rarely did, because it meant allowing the other person to truly look at them, too. Equal and opposite reactions. He made her feel like the only woman in the bookshop. Perhaps the only woman in the world. Or the universe. The moment seemed to last forever, and yet it was over much too soon. Then he'd made her a dashing bow, bid her adieu, and strolled away with Messier's Catalogue of Star Clusters and Nebulae, leaving Alexandra holding an insipid book of stories for “obedient girls.” End of scene. Or at least, it should have been the end. Alex resolved to scrub the encounter from her mental slate, but Penny—the incurable romantic among them—wouldn't allow it. Since he hadn't given his name, Penny anointed him with increasingly ridiculous titles. First he was merely the Bookshop Rake, but as the weeks wore on, he made a rapid ascent up the rungs of the peerage. Sir Read. Lord Literature. The Duke of Hatchard's. Stop, Alex told her again and again. That was ages ago, and I haven't thought of him since. He certainly hasn't thought of me. It was nothing. Except that it wasn't quite nothing. Some idiotic corner of her memory embellished the encounter with rainbows and sparkles until it resembled . . . something. Something too mortifying to ever admit aloud, even to Penny, Emma, and Nicola. In truth, Alex avoided admitting it to herself. From that day forward, whenever she visited Hatchard's—or the Temple of Muses, or even the Minerva Library—she looked for him. Imagining that they might collide once again, and he would confess, over afternoon tea that lingered into dinner, that he'd been haunting the bookshops, too—hoping to meet with her. Because, naturally, in those two minutes of painful one-sided conversation, he'd divined that an incoherent, clumsy, working-class girl small enough to fit into the average kitchen cupboard was everything he'd always yearned to find. You're exactly what I've been searching for. Now that I've found you, I'll never let you go. Alexandra, I need you. Common sense, feh. Alex worked for her living, setting clocks in the homes of wealthy customers, and she didn't have time for dreams. She set goals, and she worked to achieve them. Feet on the ground, shoulders squared, and head on straight. She would not—absolutely not—be carried away with romantic fantasies. Sadly, her imagination ignored this memorandum. In her daydreams, the afternoon tea led to walks in the park, deep conversations, kisses under the stars, and even—Alexandra's dignity wilted just thinking of it—a wedding. Truly. A wedding. Do you take this man, Anonymous Bookshop Rake with Horrid Taste in Children's Literature, to be your wedded husband? Absurd. After months of attempting to quash this madness, Alex gave up. At least the fantasies—foolish as they might be—were hers to keep secret. No one else need ever know. In all likelihood, she would never meet with the Bookshop Rake again. Until, of course, the morning that she did. Want to read more? Chapter One is available here! Photo Courtesy: @OldSkullGames/Twitter In the world of awesomely fun kids' TV, the Nickelodeon TV network holds its own against strong competitors like The Disney Channel and Cartoon Network. After Nickelodeon officially launched as the first network designed specifically for kids in 1979, it aired some original content along with syndicated repeats of longstanding favorites like Lassie and My Three Sons for a number of years. It wasn't until the early 1990s that the network really made its mark with its first hugely successful shows, led by Rugrats, Ren and Stimpy and Doug. Today, the network caters to kids in a wide age group, ranging from toddlers to teens, with shows like Paw Patrol, The Loud House and the forever iconic SpongeBob SquarePants. If your kids love to watch Nickelodeon shows, then Nickelodeon online games could provide the perfect solution for keeping boredom at bay while exercising their minds and their fine motor skills. Here's where you can find fun Nickelodeon games to play online. Official Nickelodeon Websites Besides all its auxiliary sites for viewing in other parts of the world —Australia, U.K., Africa, etc. — Nickelodeon maintains two primary sites for accessing the networks popular TV shows, games, apps and more. The Games page at Nick.com provides information on some of the most popular game apps available via the Apple App Store, Google Play and Amazon Appstore. The selection typically includes games featuring many of Nickelodeon's most popular characters, including SpongeBob and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles. Photo Courtesy: Nick.com The Games page on the Nick.tv official website boasts a much larger selection of games, all of which play from directly inside your web browser. Games may take a few seconds to load, but no downloads or storage space are necessary. Kids can try their hand at classics like mini golf with a Nickelodeon twist (Ultimate Mini-Golf Universe) or get caught up in some Mercado Mayhem with the Casagrandes. Make sure they buckle up before playing Road Riot with the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles — unless, of course, they crave a Day of Danger alongside Henry Danger. For sports fans, Basketball Stars 3 lets them rule the court as their favorite Nickelodeon characters. For a creative twist, steer kids toward games like Nick Studio and Art Lab for some coloring, music activities and more. Like the primary Nickelodeon site, Nick Jr. features some differences between the Games pages on Nickjr.com and Nickjr.tv, but for these sites, the differences are a little more complex. Some games are available to play on both sites, such as Nella the Princess Knight Super Search and Halloween House Party, but others are only available on one site or the other. The Dora the Explorer collections, for example, are completely different on the two sites, with Nickjr.com only offering two Dora games while Nickjr.tv features a larger collection of nine games that include Dora. Photo Courtesy: Nickjr.tv The games themselves are ideal for a younger crowd of players and feature all the popular — and adorable — Nick Jr. TV characters. In true kid edutainment style, the games also include educational twists to promote learning in a format that purely feels like fun. Kids can play various Paw Patrol games, such as Pawsome Mission, which teaches little ones how to use the keyboard to move the avatar and collect coins. Along the top of the screen on both sites, large icons show all the featured Nick Jr. characters, allowing them to easily select a character and see associated games — no reading required. Peppa Pig, Shimmer and Shine, Blaze, Diego and many others are ready to play with your kids. Besides games, other activities include various coloring pages and playing music from popular shows. A section for adults features links to a TV schedule, mobile apps and more. Noggin Interactive Learning Website Owned and operated by Viacom International Inc., the parent company of Nickelodeon and Nick Jr., Noggin first launched as a children's TV network. That division shut down in 2009, but Viacom revived the Noggin brand in 2015 as an educational app for children. The purpose of the app is simple — entertain and engage kids so they don't even realize it's all about learning. Photo Courtesy: Apple App Store Today, the Noggin app provides access to a range of new content every week, including videos, activities and games featuring Nick Jr.'s most popular characters — all without ads. How is that possible? The app requires a subscription fee of around $8 a month for access — after a one week free trial, of course. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET
